BHALIA WHEAT

Bhalia wheat grains are hard, vitreous & high in protein & carotene, making them ideal for semolina used in pasta & for local dishes like Bhakhari. Its low water absorption & high natural pigments enhance its quality for products such as sweet balls, Halva & Thuli. This variety commands a premium price, being 25% higher than other durum varieties & 40-50% higher than bread wheat.

UNIQUENESS

Bhalia wheat stands out due to its hard, vitreous texture, high protein content, and golden-yellow endosperm, which gives pasta its vibrant color. Its durum wheat variety produces semolina with consistent quality, ideal for pasta and other products. Unique to Bhalia, this wheat thrives in the region's black soil and conserved moisture conditions, allowing it to grow successfully with minimal irrigation. This specific cultivation environment contributes to its superior characteristics, including higher protein content compared to other durum varieties.

METHOD OF PRODUCTION

Bhalia wheat is primarily grown in the Bhal region of Gujarat, known for its arid conditions. The process involves selecting high-quality seeds, sowing them in well-prepared, dry soil, and utilizing minimal irrigation. The wheat is then harvested, threshed, & cleaned to produce high-yielding, drought-resistant grains.
