

A TALE OF GEOGRAPHICAL INDICATIONS

सत्यम् त्रेतायां द्वापरे च कलेषु, धर्मस्य पादाः क्रमशो ह्यवताराः ।
कालचक्रे धर्मसंवृद्धिहेतुः, वेदाङ्गयुक्तं खगणं प्रवर्तते ॥

Satya Yuga, Treta Yuga, Dvapara Yuga, and Kali Yuga, the pillars of Dharma diminish progressively.

The Kalachakra symbolizes the cyclical nature of time, where society progresses from spiritual wisdom to material degradation:

1. Satya Yuga: Society is at its peak, with all four pillars of Dharma intact, marked by truth, harmony, and spirituality.
2. Treta Yuga: One pillar of Dharma is lost, introducing governance and material ambitions, leading to the first signs of decline.
3. Dvapara Yuga: Two pillars remain, with society becoming more materialistic and duality intensifying, causing conflicts and moral weakening.
4. Kali Yuga: Only one pillar of Dharma remains, resulting in ignorance, greed, and societal decline, despite technological advances.

However, it also holds hope, as the cycle resets after Kali Yuga, restoring Dharma in Satya Yuga, ensuring the renewal of truth and righteousness.

GLORY OF INDIA (GI)

Indian Geographical Indications (GI) products distinguish themselves on the global stage through a remarkable synthesis of extensive historical legacy, meticulous traditional craftsmanship, and profound cultural significance. These products transcend mere commercial value, serving as living embodiments of the deep-seated heritage and time-honored practices intrinsic to their specific regions. Each GI-tagged item is not just a commodity but a narrative piece of the local's history, carrying stories of ancestral skill, regional resources, and cultural rituals that have been preserved and passed down through generations.

The origins of this intricate cultural heritage can be traced back to the Vedic period or even before, where the ritualistic needs of society fostered the development of various crafts. The demands for ritual implements, ceremonial vessels, and ornate clothing in these ancient religious practices laid the foundation for skills in metallurgy, textile production, and fine arts. This evolution showcases the Glory of India (GI) where these crafts, initially developed to serve religious purposes, gradually permeated everyday life, enhancing the socio-economic and cultural fabric of Bharat (India).

The Hindu Yuga theory, which divides time into four epochs—Satya Yuga, Treta Yuga, Dvapara Yuga, and Kali Yuga—provides a distinctive perspective on the development and flourishing of Geographical Indication (GI) products of India.

In Satya Yuga (Golden Age: 11,502 BC - 6,702 BC), known for its purity and prosperity, agricultural practices were in perfect harmony with nature, leading to the abundance of high-quality produce. This era symbolizes an ideal time when natural resources were at their peak, contributing to the excellence of GI products.

Treta Yuga (Silver Age: 6,702 BC - 3,102 BC) saw the introduction of advanced agricultural techniques and tools, leading to innovations in production. This period encouraged cultural integration and trade, resulting in the diversification and development of GI products such as Ayurvedic herbs and spices.

During Dvapara Yuga (Bronze Age: 3102 BC – 702 BC), cultural and agricultural advancements continued, with significant developments in arts and crafts. This era likely saw the establishment of communities to protect and promote specific GI products, leading to the codification and increased trade of items like Banarasi silk and traditional pottery.

In Kali Yuga (Iron Age: 702 BC-498 AD), despite the challenges of strife and disorder, there is a strong movement towards the revival and preservation of traditional practices. Modern technology enhances the production and marketing of GI products while maintaining their traditional quality.

These Yugas follow a descending order from the Satya Yuga to the Kali Yuga, indicating a gradual decline in virtue and spirituality. After the Kali Yuga, the cycle repeats in an ascending order, starting again with the Satya Yuga. This cycle is believed to repeat indefinitely, creating an eternal rhythm of time and cosmic order. Understanding the significance of these epochs provides a deeper appreciation of the historical and cultural context in which GI products have evolved, highlighting their enduring value and relevance in contemporary times.

The filing history of Indian Geographical Indication (GI) products reveals that many of these products have origins deeply rooted in the historical epochs outlined by the Hindu Yuga theory. Each epoch has contributed to the development and preservation of unique products that are now recognized under the GI Act. For modern society, categorizing these filed and registered Geographical Indication (GI) products into simplified historical periods such as Vedic, Golden, Medieval, Colonial, and Modern helps in understanding their origins and development more clearly. This approach provides a structured framework to trace the cultural, agricultural, and technological advancements that have contributed to the uniqueness and heritage of these products. Here is an overview of how various GI products can be categorized under these periods:

Vedic Period

The Vedic period, dating from around 1500 BCE to 500 BCE, laid the foundational cultural and religious practices of Hinduism through the Vedas. These ancient texts influenced various arts and sciences, shaping daily life and rituals that required precise execution. This necessitated the development of various crafts necessary for ritual performance. The era's social structure, particularly the varna system, categorized society into groups each responsible for different societal functions, which encouraged the specialization of skills such as metallurgy, agriculture, and textile production. Several modern GI products have origins tracing back to the Vedic period, including Kashmir Apple, Pokkali Rice, Beypore Uru, Pithora, Copper Bell of Kutch, Pokaran Pottery, Mojari Craft of Rajasthan, Muga Silk of Assam, Basmati Rice, Baster Dhokra, and Aronai. These products, celebrated for their quality and traditional uses, continue to preserve the rich cultural heritage and ancient craftsmanship of India.

Golden Period

Following the Vedic period, the Mauryan and Gupta eras saw significant advancements. The Mauryan Empire (c. 322—185 BCE) established a vast trade network across and beyond India, fostering economic prosperity and cultural exchange. The Gupta period, known as the Golden Age (c. 320—550 CE), witnessed a renaissance in arts and sciences. The Mauryan and Gupta periods significantly influenced the development of many traditional practices now recognized as modern GI products in India. From the vibrant Manjusa Art and fine Bhagalpuri Silk (Tussar Silk) of the Mauryan era to the exquisite Varanasi Silk and Brocades, and durable Muga Silk from the Gupta period, these times nurtured the skills that define much of India's cherished craftsmanship today. Additionally, the ancient advancements in agricultural and textile techniques during these periods laid the foundation for renowned products like Kannuj Perfume, Banaras Paan, Kancheepuram Silk Sarees, Madurai Maali, Bagh Print and Bana of Madhya Pradesh, Kusumi Lac and Sohrai of Jharkhand, Malda Mango, and, linking timeless traditions to modern economic and cultural prosperity.

Medieval Period

During the medieval period (c. 1200 - 1700 CE), India was governed by various dynasties such as the Cholas, Mughals, and Marathas, each introducing their own cultural influences into the local arts and crafts. Notable GI Products are Banarasi Sarees, which flourished under Mughal patronage in Varanasi; Thanjavur Paintings from Tamil Nadu, evolving under Maratha influence; Channapatna Toys, promoted by Tipu Sultan; Kutch Embroidery from Gujarat; and Bidriware from Karnataka, developed during the Bahamani Sultanate. Other significant products include Pashmina Shawls popularized during the Mughal era, Kasuti Embroidery, and Kangra Paintings, each a testament to the fusion of indigenous and foreign craftsmanship. Additionally, Hyderabad Biryani and Haleem, which blends Middle Eastern and South Indian culinary traditions, also emerged during this vibrant period, showcasing the rich cultural synthesis that characterizes India's traditional crafts and culinary heritage.

Colonial Period

During the colonial period (c. 1700 — 1947 CE) in India, many local crafts and agricultural practices were notably influenced by British and other European methods, resulting in a blend of traditional and colonial techniques. This period saw the establishment of renowned tea plantations like Darjeeling, Assam, Nilgiri, and Kangra, all now celebrated GI products. Textile crafts such as Chikan Embroidery, popularized among colonial wives, Mysore Silk, expanded under the Wodeyar kings during British rule, and Pochampally Ikat, adapted to cater to the European market, reflect this synthesis. Agricultural products like Coorg Orange and Kodaikanal Hill Garlic, developed to cater to British tastes in hill stations, along with Mahabaleshwar Strawberry and Allahabad Surkha Guava, introduced and perfected during the colonial era, are examples of how traditional practices were adapted and evolved. Leather crafts like Santiniketan Leather Goods gained prominence by adapting to new aesthetic preferences introduced during this era. These products, now protected as GI, underscore the historical interplay between indigenous craftsmanship and colonial influence, showcasing a legacy of innovation and cultural fusion.

Contemporary Period

In the contemporary era, Indian craftsmanship has gained international recognition by blending traditional techniques with modern aesthetics, a process further propelled by globalization. Geographical Indication (GI) tags have been instrumental in preserving and promoting India's unique heritage on a global scale. Examples include Moonj craft's eco-friendly weaving, Agra dalmoth's distinctive flavor, Indore's durable leather toys, Jabalpur's intricate stone carvings, Rajasthan's vibrant Soof embroidery, Nashik valley wine's distinct taste, Poddar Diamond's precision cuts, Bengal singing bowl's therapeutic sounds, and Odisha Golden grass's aesthetic appeal. These crafts showcase India's rich heritage and their adaptation to modern markets.

Geographical Indication (GI) products that carry the legacy of ancient India, despite lacking concrete historical evidence, often hold significant cultural, traditional, and historical value. These "Legacy Products" can reflect India's rich heritage and craftsmanship. Overall, from the Vedic period's ritualistic needs fostering early craft skills to the global appreciation of Indian craftsmanship today. Each era has contributed layers of complexity and richness, making India one of the world's most diverse and culturally rich nations, celebrated for its enduring traditions and vibrant expressions of human creativity.

भारत भाग्य विधाता

धरा को शोभित करते रहते
कला के ये निर्माता ।
सींच रहे हैं इसे युगों से
ये भारत के भाग्य-विधाता ॥

कालजयी है कला हमारी
कालजयी यह गाथा ।
जन गण मंगलदायक है
पाषाण भी स्वर्ण सा आता ॥

त्रेता द्वापर कलयुग के हर
काल के खंड से आता ।
कालचक्र सी चले निरंतर
अपनी वही पुरानी गाथा ॥

हर शुभ आशीष मांगे जिनसे
गाएँ हम जयगाथा ।
रहे संजोये कला संस्कृति
जय हो भाग्य-विधाता ॥

Conclusion

The structured categorization of Indian Geographical Indication (GI) products into historical periods such as Vedic, Golden, Medieval, Colonial, and Modern not only clarifies their origins and development but also underscores the enduring glory of India's deep-rooted culture, traditions, rituals, and wisdom. This framework highlights the continuous evolution of traditional practices, agricultural advancements, and artisanal skills through the ages, reflecting India's ability to adapt and innovate while preserving its unique legacy. Recognizing the historical context of these GI products allows us to appreciate their contribution to the nation's identity and global standing, celebrating the timeless ingenuity and cultural richness that define the glory of India.

The historical depth of Indian Geographical Indication (GI) products is evidence to the country's long-standing cultural and traditional heritage. While many foreign GIs have histories spanning 200-300 years, Indian GIs boast histories that often extend beyond 3000 years. This remarkable longevity, combined with meticulous craftsmanship, traditional techniques, and cultural significance, highlights the enduring glory of India's heritage. The protection and promotion of these products through GI tagging not only preserves and celebrates this rich legacy but also empowers artisan communities, ensuring the sustainability of these ancient traditions for future generations.

About RIPA

RIPA is a not-for-profit organization with a mission to promote and facilitate indigenous Intellectual Property (IP) on both national and international stages. Dedicated to addressing the current and future needs of the indigenous IP ecosystem, RIPA fosters an environment where local innovation and traditional knowledge can thrive. A key initiative of RIPA is the protection and promotion of Geographical Indications (GI), which safeguards products that have a specific geographical origin and possess qualities, reputation, or characteristics unique to that location.

In addition to GI protection, RIPA enhances the indigenous IP ecosystem by supporting local research and development (R&D) efforts, providing resources, guidance, and infrastructure to help innovators and researchers develop and protect their IP from conception through commercialization. Additionally, RIPA plays a vital role in uplifting indigenous artisans and the handicraft industry by offering training, market access, and legal assistance, enabling them to preserve traditional craftsmanship and compete globally. Beyond direct support, RIPA builds a comprehensive IP ecosystem through awareness, education, and capacity-building initiatives, conducting workshops and seminars to educate stakeholders on IP protection and management. Through national and international advocacy, RIPA collaborates with government bodies, international organizations, and industry stakeholders to create an enabling environment for IP protection and commercialization, positioning indigenous IP as a key contributor to global innovation and economic development.
